LAW SCHOOL TEACHING EXPERIENCE

SEATTLE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW, SEATTLE, WASHINGTON
LEGAL WRITING PROFESSOR, AUGUST 1999 TO JANUARY 2009
ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF LAWYERING SKILLS, JANUARY 2009 TO PRESENT

Teach two sections of Legal Writing I course each year to a total of approximately 30 to 35 students. Over the course of the year, students produce a series of objective legal memoranda of increasing complexity. The skills involved in producing these memoranda include understanding the drafting process; conducting legal research; analyzing legal issues; choosing an appropriate organizational scheme for the analysis; writing effective sentences and paragraphs; writing correctly; and revising and editing. Students submit drafts of each memorandum; I critique portions of each draft; students revise the drafts; and I critique and grade the final product.

Teach one section of Legal Writing II course each semester to 18 to 22 students. During the semester, students produce a trial level brief and an appellate brief. In producing these briefs, in addition to using the skills learned in Legal Writing I, students learn techniques to write persuasively. As in Legal Writing I, I provide individual critiques to the students on the drafts and finals of their briefs. In addition, students learn oral advocacy skills, and they argue the issues in the brief. For the argument on the trial-level issue, I play the role of the judge; when they argue the issues in the appellate brief, local practitioners act as judges.

Conduct out-of-class seminars for entire first year class on various writing skills, including grammar and punctuation.

Assist in training and mentoring of new Legal Writing faculty.
